On meeting with Representative Randall, the National Security Act of 1947 was outlined together with present review of Agency activities by the four congressional Subcommittees. In the interest of time, since Mr. Randall's secretary of 18 years was away from the office, he suggested that he draft out in general the type of statement he would like to use on return to his district next Wednesday for review later in the afternoon. Further meeting with the Representative was postponed later in the day to Monday.

[redacted] Accompanied Cord Meyer and [redacted] to a meeting with Senator Henry M. Jackson in connection with his appearance on a special "Meet the Press" program on the NSA matter on Sunday afternoon. We were with the Senator for approximately an hour and a half and had a full discussion of the subject. Senator Jackson requested several pieces of information from [redacted] which he is to get to the Senator Saturday morning.

Later in the day, I met with Senator Jackson again and provided him with some pertinent items including the text of the Katzenbach preliminary report and several of the more important newspaper articles. I also discussed with Senator Jackson the role of the 303 Committee and general references to it in the Katzenbach report. I also reviewed with the Senator the statutory provisions for the Agency's participation in programs of a covert action nature. I told the Senator we wanted to be completely responsive to any request which he might have in connection with this subject. He said he was most appreciative of our help.
